

Public Contracting in Oregon - Breaking the Code

December 17, 2024 • Online

Did you know that Public Contracting is the only subject in Oregon state law that requires four entire chapters in the statutes? Understanding how to apply the public contracting code and making sense of the relationships between statutes and administrative rules can be as confusing as trying to interpret a secret code or cypher in some spy thriller. Breaking the code, as the title says, might be a little bit of an exaggeration. But this course will have a go at taking some solid chips off the edges. While this course won't transform attendees into procurement specialists, it will assist board members, staff, and operators in gaining insight into what makes up the code, some of the code's complexities, how to apply selected provisions they are most likely to use, and some pitfalls to avoid. For attendees that have worked in public contracting, the materials include some of the latest updates. Whether you are new to public contracting and need to know how to get started or for folks in need of a refresher, this course will expose attendees to tools that help chip away at the complexities of the Oregon Public Contracting Code.
